Responsibility of corporations to serve the public interest In a recent discussion on the role and responsibility of corporations, the ruling Conservative Party called for a debate about the responsibilities of corporations to serve the public interest. The National Business Review is already reporting on this debate, including the reactions of both the opposition parties, the public, and prominent academics. Some of the corporate language and assumptions in the review are a little too pretentious for my tastes, but it is undeniable that there is a growing concern that companies are becoming an unresponsive, unaccountable, and perhaps even abusive force in our world. Recent media coverage of criminal activity at large companies may be a factor. Similarly, criticism from the public may have had a productive role at mobilizing the public, forcing changes at companies such as Hewlett-Packard. However, this is less a public debate about the responsibilities of corporations than it is about the role of government and the responsibility of corporations to serve the public interest. A number of newspapers, including the Guardian, covered a recent Canadian Library Journal article about the risks of Canadian libraries' reliance on commercial librarians

Bob: I was not able to secure a copy of the draft agreement. Does the terms described below look okay? Are we okay with the 10 business days as well as the 10 calendar days for performance? I am trying to get a signoff on the agreement today and will send you a fax (713/646-8511) of the agreed terms with the confidentiality provisions as we discussed. In the meantime, I am trying to get to the bottom of the other points discussed. Please feel free to contact me at any time regarding the other issues. Thanks, Kim ----- Forwarded by Kim Ward/HOU/ECT on 08/25/2000 04:49 PM ----- Enron North America Corp. From: Kim Ward 08/24/2000 02:50 PM To: Bob Bowen/HOU/ECT@ECT cc: Jeff Dasovich/NA/Enron@Enron Subject: Re: 1. In the interest of your being able to sign this tomorrow, here is the draft without the confidentiality provision. 2. Let me know if you have any questions about the contract in general. I guess the most important issue would be determining the format of the confidentiality provisions in the agreement. Is it okay if they are in a separate document? Let me know if you have time over the weekend and will fax you b7e8fdf5c8
